About AUN (ASEAN University Network)

At the Fourth ASEAN Summit, the ASEAN leaders directed that ASEAN should help hasten the solidarity and the development of a regional identity by considering ways to further strengthen the existing network of the leading universities and institutions of higher learning in the region. The idea was later developed into ASEAN University Network (AUN) which was established in November 1995 with the signing of its Charter by the Ministers responsible for Higher Education from ASEAN countries, the signing of the Agreement on the Establishment of the AUN by the presidents/rectors/vice-chancellors of participating universities and the formation of AUN Board of Trustees.

The main objective of the AUN is to strengthen the existing network of co-operation among leading universities in ASEAN, by promoting co-operation and solidarity among ASEAN scholars and academics, developing academic and professional human resources, and promoting information dissemination among ASEAN academic community. Indeed, the network has galvanised the individual ASEAN countries' quests for academic collaboration in collectively defined priority areas that would deepen understanding of the dynamic of ASEAN, and thereby accelerate the development of regional identity and solidarity.

The AUN currently undertakes more than 20 collaborative projects within ASEAN and with its dialogue partners. Our activities grouped by themes are including:

Youth

The main activities are Student and faculty exchange, AUN Educational Forum and Young Speakers Contest, ASEAN Youth Cultural Forum, ASEAN Studies Programmes:

Faculty Members

AUN Distinguished Scholars Programme, AUN Collaborative Research:

The Executive Level

AUN Board of Trustees Meeting, AUN Rectors' Conference, AUN Rectors' Meeting

The initiatives

On-going projects are including Information Networking, AUN-Quality Assurance: ASEAN Graduate Business/Economics Programme (AGBEP) Network, Initiative for ASEAN Integration (IAI), AUN Intellectual Property (AUNIP) Network, AUN Human Rights Education Network:

In addition, the AUN is now also playing a significant role in fostering human resource development and academic communities with its dialogue partner including, China, European Union, Japan, India and Republic of Korea. Source: www.aunsec.org

About Kyoto University

Kyoto University: Overview (*cited from Kyoto University at a Glance 2010)

Kyoto Imperial University was founded over a hundred years ago as one of two imperial universities. Since that time, many things have changed. However, the university has remained faithful to its principle of academic freedom and has since focused its efforts in developing a strong sense of purpose reflected in its mission statement: "To sustain and develop its historical commitment to academic freedom and pursue a state of harmonious coexistence within the human and ecological community on this planet".

The College of Science and Engineering was established at the time of Kyoto University's inauguration. In the following year, the basic organisation was completed with the opening of the College of Law, the College of Medicine, the University Hospital and the University Library. In 1919, the colleges became faculties, and Kyoto Imperial University was renamed Kyoto University. Since then, new faculties, graduate schools, research institutes, centres and other new facilities have been established regularly. In recent years, Kyoto University has come to place a greater emphasis on graduate level studies and have established several new graduate schools to tackle emerging issues, expected to be of critical importance this century.

"As a university that is comprised of many graduate schools, faculties, research institutes and centres, Kyoto University will strive for diverse development in pure and applied research in the humanities, sciences and technology, while seeking new and varied interdisciplinary perspectives."

Creative research in venture businesses for information technology and electrical engineering has also been initiated, and substantial progress in advanced applied research fields, such as biotechnology and energy science continues, thus assuring that our efforts truly have an impact on society.

Yoshida Campus, the main campus of Kyoto University is near the centre of Kyoto City. The facilities at Yoshida Campus are housed in century-old red brick buildings standing side-by-side with state-of-the-art laboratories. Uji Campus, where the university's natural science and energy research facilities are located, is about twelve kilometres to the south. This campus, named after the region in which it is located, is made up of four clusters of buildings, and aims to merge technology and science disciplines to form a "Techno-Science Hill". The Graduate Schools of Engineering and Informatics are currently in the process of moving to Katsura Campus from Yoshida Campus.

Kyoto University consists of three campuses: Yoshida, Uji, and Katsura, as well as a number of facilities located across Japan.

1. Yoshida Campus

The Yoshida Campus has been at the core of the university's activities since its founding. In particular, the main campus is home to structures of varying architectural styles, ranging from brick buildings dating back to the time of the institution's establishment-such as the Clock Tower

Centennial Hall that serves as the symbol of the university-to modern laboratory buildings. It can truly be said to represent the history of Kyoto University in tangible form. The Yoshida Campus is further subdivided into seven sections.

2. Uji Campus

Formerly owned by the Imperial Army, the site of the Uji Campus came into the possession of Kyoto University in 1949. The campus is now home to a collection of research institutes and centers, and large-scale testing facilities devoted to work in natural science and energy related fields. But even though the campus hosts many state-of-the-art laboratories engaged in the development of cutting edge science and technology, it is rich in greenery and enjoys a tranquil suburban setting.

3. Katsura Campus

Kyoto University's third campus, the Katsura Campus, consists of four Clusters. Conceived as a "Techno-science Hill," the Katsura Campus is a locus where technology and science merge in exciting new ways. This new base for exploring fresh areas of knowledge opened in October 2003 -a place where technology, regions, and nature blend and interact in sophisticated ways, and where research in engineering and informatics is undertaken based on a new paradigm for the 21st century.
